Let's say I have the task to write all hexacode with length less than or equal to the length of the provided string. For example, I need to provide 2 inputs: Hexadecimal-code and string. The program should tell me for each character of the provided string if it is "Hex-adcem" or "wrong-guess" where "wrong-guess" means that the provided character is not a part of the given hexadecimal-code. Example inputs: INPUT : HEXACODE : 1234AB567CD789EFGO STRING : 1234AB567 OUTPUT: for "HEX-adcem", 1234AB567 -> 1 for "wrong-guess", 1234AB567 -> 0 This is an interview-question. I am curious which part of the problem I can use as a basis for my own solution? A: 2^(4*len(input)) will give you all possibilities, and it's a time-lower bound for anything except the most simple pseudoprime tests. You'd better use Len(input)  len(input) or Len(input)  len(input) + 1, better still Len(input)  Len(input) for a better upper bound. Note that if length is less than 2^4, it's trivially true that no bad guesses exist. (You can find such an example by enumerating all possibilities and checking for negatives or not conforming to the length property.) Your "wrong-guess" criterion is ill-defined, but if

Data are sometimes displayed on screens in video form. In such a display operation, an image of a frame of data is displayed in front of a screen in a manner such that the data may be referred to as being part of the image. If data that are time-sequential frames of data are displayed, as they are being transmitted or received from a server, a malfunction may occur in the data being displayed on the screen because there is insufficient time to re-draw the screen for each new frame of data. As a result, there is a malfunction in the

It is one of the 13 localities in Lebanon under the authority of Nahr al-Kabir District, Ain Zkayneh Canton. Tussu's on-again, off-again internal strife dates to the late 1960s, when two opposing political groups began to wage a turf war. The result was the massacre of at least 300 villagers, beginning in early 1969 and lasting until July 1973. The rioting and killing prompted
