What I noticed about this release is that it is extremely competitive in price with other programs around this category. This competition doesn't just come from Adobe Elements (which is the lowest tier of Photoshop), it also comes from companies like Affinity Photo. When looking into other programs that offer similar features to Photoshop (adjustments, editing, etc.) I found similar pricing within the industry. For example: FotoNation costs $49.99 (while I couldn't find a price for Affinity Photo as their website isn't updated anymore, it still offers their professional stock photo collections for free). Photoshop Elements serves as the starting point for a lot of image editing tools (with the exception of color management). The cost of Elements is $49.99. It's probably one of the worst decisions Adobe has ever made in its long history. It's no wonder the company made the decision to cut the price of the software everywhere. These days it can be found on sale for as low as the price of a single image editing app ($30). This is a mistake that can only serve to destroy a program with such a bright future ahead of it. Fireworks is still a solid program, and is currently much cheaper than Photoshop. The good news for people whose favorite software publisher has just been purchased by a company with an equally large portfolio of mediocre, often low-quality products is that the new company will be able to continue distributing the software they've been doing such a bang-up job of weeding out of the parental pool (kids you know what I'm talking about). Adobe has not only moved all its desktop apps back to Creative Cloud, but has removed the "Creative Suite 6" moniker. From now on, Creative Cloud users will be able to get Photoshop, Illustrator, InDesign, Adobe Premiere Elements, After Effects, Audition, Acrobat

Professional, Indesign, You \"Create\" the rest of the software suite, Photoshop Touch, and Audition for iOS. Sure, it's a mouthful. Don't let the name fool you—Dreamweaver is still part of the Creative Suite 6 portfolio. Why include a program if you can just throw it away? It's true. Adobe broke up its flagship programs last year, and now we've got everything under one roof again, where we can see a relatively new batch of Creative Cloud stat-tracking stuff. This isn't good news for the desktop users, but it's great news for the online community that will enjoy a huge number of professionally-made templates from which to gingerly draw inspiration.
